BLUEBERRY BARRENS

MAINE INDUSTRY THAT IS PROVING VERY PROFITABLE.

Large Tracts of Land in That State Devoted to Culture of the Fruit—Details of the Business.

Prof. W. M. Munson, of the University of Maine, contributes to the report issued by Edgar E. Ring, forest commissioner for Maine, an instructive paper on "Blueberry Culture." In some parts of Maine, particularly in Washington county, the management of lands that have been deforested and that would be worthless for general agricultural purposes, has been systematized and the canning of blueberries has become an important industrial operation. Appended below are liberal extracts from the professor's interesting sketch:

The land devoted to the blueberry industry in Maine lies mostly in Washington county, where there are about 150,000 acres known as the "blueberry barrens." This land lies chiefly in the townships of Cherryfield, Columbia, Debois, Beddington, Harrington, Jonesboro and Nos. 18 and 19. Recently a canning factory has been established at Vanceboro for the utilization of the fruit in the northern part of the county. Much of this land was burned over by the Indians before the colonial period, and since the timber was removed from the remainder, it too, has repeatedly been burned to keep down the growth of birches, alders, etc., and to facilitate the harvesting of the fruit. About 40,000 acres of the barrens belong to William Freeman, of Cherryfield, who may be said to be the pioneer in the blueberry industry of America. After long and bitter litigation he proved beyond question his right to charge royalty for all fruit gathered on his lands, and established a systematic method of treatment, which is applicable, under most conditions, everywhere. The method is somewhat as follows:

The land is divided into several tracts, each of which is leased to some responsible party, who assumes the whole care of burning, keeping off trespassers, harvesting and marketing the fruit. The owner receives as rental one-half cent. per quart for all the fruit gathered.

The pickers receive from one and a half to three cents per quart; those who lease the land and haul the fruit to the canning factory, or to the station for shipment, one-half of one cent. per quart—the rate being determined in accordance with the market value, by the firm which handles the product. The fruit is all canned or shipped by one firm, which keeps a record of the amount as it is brought in and pays royalty to the owner. Every year a certain section of each "lease" is burned over.

The financial importance of the blueberry industry is very difficult even to estimate at the present time. In Maine the canning of blueberries is largely in the hands of a few leading packers. The largest of these factories has a daily capacity of 700 bushels and the average annual output is 8,300 cases of two dozen cans each, representing 6,350 bushels of fresh fruit. The average price per case for the canned fruit is $1.90. In other words, the value of the annual product of this one factory is not far from $15,000.

The number of hands employed in the various factories would aggregate about 100, but including the pickers there are from 1,000 to 2,000 men, women and children employed in the blueberry packing industry during the canning season. About $20,000 are distributed among the pickers each year. The total canned product of the "blueberry barrens" in 1923 was about 50,000 cases, and the price per case was $2.20, making the value of the blueberry crop in this one section considerably more than $100,000. Some seasons the value of the crop will be more than this some seasons less.

Notice.

If you have not had deeds re-recorded, you will be sending them in at one time for re-recording free of charge will soon be up. All records from 1 to 59 inclusive (except 41 and 42) were burned. All records for A. B. C. etc., were saved.
